INDIVIDUAL APPEAL
SAIDZHAKHON ZAINABITDINOV

Uzbekistan, in Central Asia, has a grim reputation for the imprisonment, torture and murder of those who dissent in any way from President Karimov's dictatorial rule.

Saidzhakhon Zainabitdinov is Chair of a local human rights group and has often spoken out against the cruelties of Karimov's rule and, in May 2005, he provided an honest report on the Andijan massacre, in which security forces killed and wounded about 1,000 protestors. Since then he has been in jail.

Please write to President Karimov (address as below) - a rough outline is set out below but please feel free to put it in your own words.

Dear President Karimov

SAIDZHAKHON ZAINABITDINOV

I am concerned that Mr Zainabitdinov was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment after a secret trial in January 2006; this violates Uzbekistan's international obligation to ensure free trials.

I would urge you to disclose the whereabouts of Mr Zainabitdinov and allow access to him by his relatives and his lawyers.

Amnesty International considers him to be a prisoner of conscience and I support their demand for his immediate and unconditional release.

I would also like to support the call for an independent international investigation into reports that security forces fired indiscriminately at mainly peaceful demonstrators in Andizhan in May 2005.

I would finally urge you and your government to ensure that everyone, including human rights defenders, can peacefully exercise their right to freedom of expression in conformity with Article 19 of the ICCPR.

Yours sincerely

On 2 May Cyclone Nargis devastated Myanmar's Irrawaddy (Ayeyawady) Delta region. Tens of thousands were killed and over a million made homeless, without essential food, shelter or healthcare. The UN estimates that up to 2.5 million have been severely affected and urgently need relief to prevent more deaths and the spread of disease. A massive rehabilitation effort is needed in the months and even years ahead.

The Myanmar authorities maintain that they need no help in providing and distributing aid to victims. However, UN agencies and humanitarian organisations with expertise in natural disaster management say that a massive international relief effort was needed immediately after the cyclone, and what little aid is reaching victims now is nowhere near sufficient.

Amnesty International is also concerned that the Karen and other ethnic minorities living in the affected area may be discriminated against in the provision of relief aid. Widespread and systematic human rights violations against the Karen and other ethnic minorities in Myanmar have been well documented for decades.

Amnesty International fears that thousands more people will die from malnutrition, communicable diseases and exposure to the elements as a result of the Myanmar government's actions and omissions. In addition to the impact of this serious humanitarian crisis in Myanmar, there are wider regional implications, including on food security as the Irrawaddy Delta is a major rice-growing area, and displacement of people from Myanmar within the Southeast Asia Region.

Dear Secretary-General of ASEAN,

I am writing about the humanitarian and human rights crisis unfolding in Myanmar since Cyclone Nargis caused tens of thousands of deaths and devastated the Irrawaddy (Ayeyawady) Delta region. Up to 2.5 million people have been severely affected and made homeless without essential food, shelter or healthcare. Survivors and victims are not receiving the necessary relief, and it is feared that thousands more will die because of malnutrition, communicable diseases and exposure to the elements.

I welcome that ASEAN has formed an Emergency Rapid Assessment Team in response, and I am asking that ASEAN and the member states of ASEAN, collectively and individually, redouble efforts to use their influence and do their utmost to pressure and encourage the government of Myanmar to immediately end all obstructions placed in the way of international expert aid and assistance. A massive international relief effort is needed to get aid to those who are suffering hour by hour, to allow UN and NGO experts immediate unhindered access to the affected areas, in assisting the Myanmar authorities in protecting their people, and preventing this humanitarian and human rights crisis from deteriorating further. By deliberately blocking life-sustaining aid, the government of Myanmar may be violating the right of its population to life, and to adequate food and healthcare.

Some of the possible wider implications of this humanitarian and human rights crisis in Myanmar include rice shortages and massive displacement within the Southeast Asia region, which should be the concern of all ASEAN member states.

In signing the ASEAN Charter, all ASEAN member states undertook to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms.

I hope you will give urgent consideration to these concerns.
